

Releases VEAT, a New Dating App Letting Users Share 7-Second Videos with others in 151 Countries Worldwide

~ video x beat = VEAT ~

Tokyo, May 16 - Diverse, Inc. releases VEAT, a dating app that utilizes video profiles to share with other users worldwide. VEAT is currently available on Apple's App Store. Tokyo-based Diverse, Inc. says it will release an Android version in the very near future.

Leveraging the app's 7-second video profile feature, VEAT is unique in that users can express themselves in a way they couldn't with just photos. When two users like each other's video profiles, a match is made, unlocking in-app chatting.

In April 2016, research was conducted in collaboration with Diverse Institute Technology to assess how first impressions differed between photos and videos. The researchers concluded that videos was judged as more effective in bringing out users' personalities, as subjects who watched videos of another person reported having a better feeling of that person's character traits, in comparison to seeing a photo of the same person and judging them based on looks alone. Diverse, Inc. wanted to create a casual dating/social discovery app that allows for more expression and freedom to be creative when making your profile through the medium of short video clips.

Believing that friends bring out the best in you, the promotional videos embody the theme, "Capture Moments With Friends." Using the power of video, the app allows users and their friends to create more social connections with those nearby.

With social apps like Snapchat and musical.ly gaining momentum, VEAT's team focused on the ongoing trend of video selfies and communication. The app was created to give more freedom to users in the way they choose to express themselves, be it simple selfies or a snap introducing friends and hobbies. Launched in 151 countries worldwide. VEAT also introduces a globally appealing design with excellent, user-friendly features.
